“Red Lake Mountain Ranch Subdivision is being sold without an on-site domestic water supply. The development is located in a part of Arizona where groundwater is probably not available. ## SUBDIVISION CHARACTERISTICS

Topography: The land is gently sloping with a steep rise to the southeast. Views and scenes that are visible from particular portions of the property will change over time and may be blocked or partially obstructed as development activity continues and landscaping matures within and outside the area.

Flooding and Drainage: State whether the subdivision is subject to any known flooding or drainage problems or downstream from any existing flood structure/dam. Then restate the information from the engineer's Flood Letter for the subdivision.

Douglas Slover, P.E. CFM of APEX Land Surveys in his letter dated October 12, 2020 states that: Subject: Flood Certification Letter for Various Lots within Red Lake Mountain Ranch Subdivision " The 54 parcels of the Red Lake Mountain Ranch Subdivision are in the unincorporated portion of Coconino County, Arizona near Williams, Arizona. The approximate location is along Bellavista Loop Road near Highway 64 at Section 3, Township 23N, Range 2E. The site is approximately 322 acres composed of 54 lots with a minimum size of 5 acres and a maximum size of 12.1 acres. Details of the individual parcels are attached as Table 1 on the following pages.

The Flood Insurance Rate Map for Coconino County, Arizona, panel number 0400505900G effective date 09/03/2010 indicates that the entirety of the subdivision, all 54 parcels, is in minimal flood risk as defined by Zone X (Unshaded). Zone X is defined as FEMA as follows:

Zone X (Unshaded): Areas of minimal flood hazard with less than 0.2% annual chance flood; and areas protected by levees from 1% annual chance flood.

FEMA does not require flood insurance (National Flood Insurance Program) are areas in Zone X. Localized flooding may still be possible in Zone X in small depressions or un-mapped dammed areas, future development on this parcel should access localized drainage to ensure that the local flood risk is still low. All development will have to conform to Coconino County Code."

Soils: The subdivision lots are subject to expansive soils.

In a letter by Speedie and Associates dated December 8, 2007 states in part: Speedie & Associates has been at the above referenced site to perform a soil sampling investigation and are familiar with the general soils types as present. The testing conducted was to provide information regarding subsidence, expansive soils, and known geological hazards. It was not conducted to address foundation design for residential structures. It is recommended that site specific investigation be conducted as each lot is developed.

In general the soils encountered during the field investigation consisted of high plasticity sandy "fat" clay, sandy clay and clayey silty sand and gravel. Based on the soils encountered, construction or residential type structures on standard shallow foundation systems is typically subject to remedial earthwork and/or specialized foundation systems are required.

The site has expansive soils. Although not encountered in all locations, they are a significant concern for construction. The high plasticity "fat" clay has a swell (expansion) potential that is typically strong enough to cause differential movements and damage to lightly loaded structures in addition to concrete slabs-on-grade such as floors and sidewalks. The differential movement is typically a result of post construction fluctuation in moisture contents. Preventing moisture changes under the foundations in addition to concrete slabs-on grade is critical to reducing potential movement. With residential construction, this is extremely difficult due to drainage and landscaping changes incorporated by the various homeowners. Potential homeowners must be made aware of the risk associated with the expansive soils on site and restrictions on grading and landscaping adjacent to foundation elements and concrete slabs. Typical recommendations made, when properly executed, will help reduce, but not necessarily eliminate the swell potential.

Typical recommendations include the placement of non-expansive material beneath concrete slabs or the use of suspended wood floors. Attention must be paid to provide and maintain proper drainage to limit the potential for water infiltrating under slabs and foundations. A minimum slope of a least 5 percent for a distance of 10 feet is recommended in unpaved landscaped areas. The lots should be uniformly graded away from the structures and drainage should not be allowed to discharge towards adjacent or proposed structures. Irrigation systems and planters requiring heavy watering should not be placed against the foundation. Roof drains should be installed and directed to discharge to either storm drains or the pavement, not unpaved planters adjacent to the structures. Based on the swell potential of the clayey soils, these recommendations alone on typical shallow spread footings and slab-on-grade construction may not be sufficient without significant structural damage occurring.

Remedial earthwork or specialized foundation systems can further reduce the potential for structural damage. Remedial earthwork beneath foundations typically consists of carrying the foundation to rock or to a depth in which moisture fluctuations are reduced on the construction of a barrier wall to prevent moisture infiltration. Specialized foundation systems include mat foundations or the use of a post-tension foundation slab-on grade system. Both of these foundation systems are designed to move with the expanding soil. Post tensioned slabs should be designed in accordance with the procedures given in the Design and Construction of Post-Tensioned Slabs-On-Ground, by the Post Tensioning Institute. This type of foundation system is more flexible and may require special design and construction of the superstructure and interior walls to allow for this flexibility.

This project is not located in an area that is known for subsidence due to groundwater withdrawal or any other known geological hazards that would or may be detrimental to a purchaser's health, safety, or welfare.
